Q My son wants to play the electric guitar. Should he start on an acoustic first to learn the basics.

A One of the most important things when learning an instrument is being excited. Let them learn on whatever gets them excited the most. You want them to want to practice and play and have fun. If they want electric but get acoustic it could become a struggle and chore and maybe lose interest in something that could have been great for them.

As a teacher I know how important it is to keep it fun. One of the ways we do that is by letting the student help with developing the curriculum. Playing the right instrument and learning the music you like is a winning combination. This will get you or your child through the first learning curve (which can be a challenge) and picking up their instrument more, and that's the goal

Music lessons for all ages from 3-100.

GUITAR • VOCALS • BASS • PIANO • DRUMS
